

Diana Langer Jones grew up in Michigan, studying voice and piano. She attended the University of Michigan, where she was able to travel as a performer to the Far East and Germany. These travels and performances led Diana to tour more frequently, joining the Actor's Equity Union, and working with artists such as Jayne Mansfield, Liza Minnelli and Joel Grey. Diana went on to sing in Vietnam for the American G.I.'s, and after touring the US and Europe for over two years, she moved to New York full time.

She began singing in the New York City Opera Chorus, and enjoyed a long career as a cabaret singer-pianist in New York. After her retirement, she has become involved with charities she supports, traveling, and soaking up culture. She now makes her home in Savannah, and lives with her dogs.
